Bengaluru: The 2020 Indian National Rally Championship (INRC), running three months behind schedule with one race dropped due to the coronavirus pandemic, is set to vroom again in June with the organizers looking to flag off the season with the South India Rally in Chennai without any fans.

“I already had a chat with Vicky Chandok, South India Rally head and we are going ahead with the preparations as we are doing the rally in private land. I am sure with the support of top FMSCI officials we will be able to conduct the race on June 12,” Vamsi Merla, INRC promoter told TOI.

Merla said the participants will have to clear a mandatory medical check-up to take part in the rally. “We are also planning to accommodate the participants in one hotel. They will be told to take all precautions including wearing masks and carrying sanitizers from the time they leave their homes,” he said.
